Section H: Open-ended Comprehension

Read the following passage carefully.

Once upon a time, there was a boy who often got angry and said mean things to everyone around him. Nobody wanted to be friends with him. One day, his grandfather had an idea. He gave the boy a box full of nails and said to him, "Dear, hammer a nail into our backyard fence every time you lose your temper."

The boy started to follow his grandfather's advice. On the first day, he hammered in forty-two nails. However, getting the nails into the fence was hard so he started controlling himself when he got angry. As the days went by, he was hammering in fewer nails.

Within 2 weeks, he was able to control himself from getting angry. The boy went to his grandfather and told him what he had achieved. His grandfather said, "But now, you have to take out a nail for every day that you do not get angry." The boy did as he was told.

When there was no nail left in the fence, the boy went to his grandfather. His grandfather took him to the fence and said, "Dear, you have done well. However, look at these holes in the fence. This fence will never be the same again." Then, he added, "When you say things in anger, they leave marks like these holes in the hearts of others. People are much more valuable than an old fence. We need to treat everyone with love and respect."

Once upon a time, there was a boy who often got angry and said mean things to everyone around him. Nobody wanted to be friends with him. One day, his grandfather had an idea. He gave the boy a box full of nails and said to him, "Dear, hammer a nail into our backyard fence every time you lose your temper."

The boy started to follow his grandfather's advice. On the first day, he hammered in forty-two nails. However, getting the nails into the fence was hard so he started controlling himself when he got angry. As the days went by, he was hammering in fewer nails.

Within 2 weeks, he was able to control himself from getting angry. The boy went to his grandfather and told him what he had achieved. His grandfather said, "But now, you have to take out a nail for every day that you do not get angry." The boy did as he was told.

When there was no nail left in the fence, the boy went to his grandfather. His grandfather took him to the fence and said, "Dear, you have done well. However, look at these holes in the fence. This fence will never be the same again." Then, he added, "When you say things in anger, they leave marks like these holes in the hearts of others. People are much more valuable than an old fence. We need to treat everyone with love and respect."
