Section G: Comprehension 1 (10m)

Hawker centres are places in Singapore where everyone can enjoy affordable and delectable food. Since the founding of modern Singapore in 1819, street food stands were common across the island. However, many of these stands were uncovered and unhygienic. By the 1920s, the local government and community decided to create simple shelters to house these stalls to create an early form of a hawker centre. 5

Even though these shelters were set up, many hawkers refused to move into the hawker centres as they did not want to pay rent. They continued selling their food on the streets. Often, they would throw their food waste and other rubbish in the drains along the streets. This unhygienic practice resulted in attracting many pests such as cockroaches and rats, and it spread many diseases in Singapore such as cholera and typhoid. 10

During the 1960s, street hawkers were banned from selling food in most streets in Singapore due to the pollution they were causing. The government then began to build many hawker centres to house these hawkers, at an average of five new hawker centres a year. By the 1970s, most of these hawkers then decided to close their street stalls to move into hawker centres as Singaporeans preferred to dine in cleaner and more comfortable environments. 15

Today, many of the best food in Singapore can be found in these hawker centres. Tourists from all over the world travel to Singapore to try its world-famous cuisine not in posh restaurants, but in its humble hawker centres. In fact, two stalls in our hawker centres are the only street food vendors in the world to receive a Michelin star, which is an international award usually given to only the best restaurants in the world. 20

Section H: Comprehension 2 (10m)

Mary came home to the sweet aroma of freshly-baked cookies. She quickly ran into the kitchen, only to discover that her younger brother, Tom, had baked a batch of cookies. Tom had never shown any interest in baking and she pinched herself to confirm that she was not dreaming.

"Tom, why are you baking cookies?" asked Mary. 5

"I am practicing for the school's junior chef competition. I saw the poster yesterday and the prize is a free ticket to a theme park," replied Tom excitedly.

Mary had seen the poster for the competition last week, and she had also made up her mind to take part in it. She was confident that she would win the challenge as she had attended many cooking classes over the years, and she cooked regularly for her family. However, when she saw Tom's plate of perfectly-formed cookies, and sniffed the irresistible smell, her confidence began to wane.

"Can I try one?" asked Mary, hoping that the cookies would taste much worse than they looked or smelled. Tom nodded and Mary put a cookie into her mouth. Instantly, the cookie melted in her mouth and she tasted what was possibly the best-tasting cookie she had ever had. The delightful experience soon turned into fear and jealousy, as Mary realised that Tom would win the competition. 15

"How's the cookie? Is it good?" Tom asked with great anticipation in his voice. Mary shook her head. Immediately, Tom's head began to lower and he poured the whole plate of cookies into the rubbish bin. Mary was overjoyed as her closest competitor had given up on the competition. As Mary walked back into her room, she could hear Tom sobbing pitifully in the kitchen. Her heart began to sink and she regretted what she had done. 20

"I am sorry I lied about the cookies. They were perfect, and they were far better than I could ever make them. You will definitely win the competition," Mary apologised, "come, let's bake another batch! Those cookies are so great!" 25

A smile returned to Tom's face and together, they made the next batch of cookies even better. Winning the competition was now a sure thing!
