Comprehension 1(10marks)

The railway station was crowded that day. We were all at the platform waiting for the train to arrive. Soon the rumbling of the train could be heard.

As soon as the train crawled to a stop and its doors swung open, my friend and I scrambled up the train from the platform and dashed to our seats. A final boarding announcement was made. At the eleventh hour, a man and his son, about 15 years of age, boarded the train and sat adjacent to us. The train then left the station. 5

The teenager looked out of the window and exclaimed in surprise, "Dad, the things are moving backwards!" His father smiled and nodded his head. As the train increased its speed, the boy shouted excitedly, "Dad, the trees are running backwards very quickly now!" 10

"Yes, dear," his father said and smiled, watching his son squeal in delight and amazement like a three-year-old.

My friend and I were watching all that had transpired. Was this how a normal teenager should behave? Curiosity got the better of me and I asked, "Hey, Mister, does your son have a problem?" Before the man could answer, my friend commented, "His son is mad, I think." 15

The father patiently replied, "My son was born blind. It was only a few days ago that he received his sight. He is seeing many things in his life for the first time." 20

My friend and I became very quiet and apologised to the father and son.

Question 31

Comprehension 2 (10marks)

Gunner, a six-month-old male stray dog, was found in a destroyed building on 19 February 1942 by some soldiers from the Royal Australian Air Force after a Japanese air raid on Darwin. The dog had a broken leg and was whimpering.

Percy Westcott, one of those who found Gunner, made it his duty to help this dog. Westcott took the dog to a hospital where a doctor insisted that he could not treat any 'man' who did not have a name or serial number. So, Westcott named the dog 'Gunner' and gave him the serial number 0000. Satisfied, the doctor put a cast on Gunner's leg and set them on the way. 5

From that point onward, Gunner and Westcott were inseparable. One day, as Westcott and the other soldiers went about their daily routine at the airfield, Gunner got so worked up and started barking and jumping. The men paid no attention to the dog. However, within minutes, Japanese bombers swooped in and started bombing Darwin again. 10

It was a surprise attack to everyone except Gunner. Luckily, the soldiers and Gunner managed to dive to safety. Two days later, Gunner acted up again. This time, the men were prepared for the upcoming attack. 15

From February 1942 to November 1943, Gunner warned the soldiers of nearly every air raid and saved countless lives. He was able to tell the difference between the sounds of the engines used by Australian and Japanese aircraft with his extraordinary hearing. 20
