Section E: Comprehension (10marks)

When Terry and Jim finally reached the top, they smelled smoke. Jim looked around for the source. "Terry!" he whispered, "The Community House ..."

Terry saw it too. They had been in its basement just fifteen minutes ago. Where was everybody? Had the children started on their breakfast yet? These questions raced through Terry's mind as they bolted down the hill.

All the doors were ablaze, but the boys broke in through the basement door. Where were the children? The flames were getting more intense, and the thick smoke caused Jim to gasp. Then, a piercing scream came from the first floor. Terry and Jim darted upstairs and found five children huddling in the corner, wailing in fear.

Terry pushed open the window and they lifted the children out to safety. Then both of them leaped out of it as well. That was when they heard a child scream. Terry started to go back in but Jim grabbed and restrained him. The last thing Terry remembered was Jim dragging him away from the burning house before he fainted.

When Terry woke up from the hospital bed, everything was spinning. "Where's Jim?" he asked the nurse. Then, Terry remembered the scream. She reassured him, "Your friend was injured while dragging you away from the fire, but he should be fine. A firefighter had also saved Millie, the last trapped child. Both Jim and Millie are recovering well in the hospital."

Where were Terry and Jim when they realised the Community House was on fire?

Section F: Comprehension (10marks)

There was a king of Scotland named Robert Bruce. His country was invaded by the English, who wanted to rule their northern neighbour. Many fierce battles were fought but the English were victorious time after time. The king had tried to save Scotland from his enemies, but he lost every battle. Most of his soldiers had been killed or wounded. To save himself from the same fate, Robert Bruce had to flee to a small island. Eventually, the defeated Scottish armies had to retreat.

Robert Bruce found a deserted hut and had to seek shelter there from the pouring rain. He lay down on the floor of the hut and thought to himself, "I've fought six battles and I have been defeated all six times by the English. I might as well give up."

He was thinking about his difficult situation when he suddenly noticed a tiny spider hanging from a swinging thread, trying to spin its web. However, the thread broke and the spider fell to the ground. The spider crawled up the wall and tried again. Again, it failed and fell.

Undaunted, the spider tried once more. Robert Bruce forgot his problems and watched it with fascination. Six times the spider attempted to spin a web and six times it failed.

"Surely it will not try again," thought the king. "The spider must be discouraged by now." Much to his amazement, the spider persisted. Finally, on the seventh try, the little creature achieved what it had set out to do.

"Little spider, thank you for the lesson you have taught me. Like you, I have failed many times, but I must try again till I too can succeed."

Therefore, Robert Bruce went back into battle and eventually drove his enemies out of Scotland.
