Comprehension (20m)

Sea Robit rocked and pitched in the waves. Damien was clambering across the deck when a huge wave crashed against the Sea Robin, knocking him off the boat and info the ocean. He screamad, "Helpl"

On board the Sea Robin, Mike heard the cry and saw Damien far out at sea. He swung quickly into action and tranamitted a diatress call to the Coast Guard. A helicopter was dispstchad in a mather of minutes. There was a sense of urgency as the rescuers knew from experience that most people would not survive in such rough conditions for more than a few hours.

Wave atter wave slammed Damien hard and forced him under the surface. Again and again he fought his way back up. Whout a life jacket. Damien was fighting to stsy aflost in the incressingly violent sea. Fighting back the rising sonse of panic, he removed his shirt, shoes and pants. That fid him of extre woight and he started swimming in the direction the Sea Robis had gone. As lightning bogan flashing all around him, he ecwisioned someone going to his home and telling his wife and chlldren that he had beon lost at ses. "No wayl I cant lot them down," he told himseif. The thought helped pust him on.

After more than an hour of swirrming. Darnien was exhausted. As a huge wave swelled and tifed him up, he could hardly believe his eyes: the See Rabir was just a few metres awayl As the boat neared, Damion could see Mike looioing out tensely at him. Mike threw a Ife jacket and a rope to him. Hugging the He facket closa to hin chest like a float, Damien then held tightly onto the rope: Relieved, he felt himself being pulled towards the side of the boat.

Mike hauled Damien onto the boat and knew immediately there was something wrong with Damien. Damien collapsed in pain as his muscles contracted wildiy. Mike knew that Damien was in danger of heat failure and neaded medical treatment critically. Alarmed, Mike radioed for a rascue basket to hoist Damien to the helicoptar which he could see approaching.

The choppy sea now posed another problem. The helicopter could not land the basket within reach of Mike's outstretched hands. The high waves and constant rocking motion made landing with procision difficult. To make matters worse, the helicopter was using up ics fuel too quickly by having to fight against the fierce winds to remain hovering above the Sea Robin. the rescuers finally managed to land the basket directly on the boat. Seeing Damien's condition, Mike wasted no time in seciing Damien in the basicet. In one smooth action, the rescuers in the hellcopter hoisted it off the boat and into the helicopler urgently before speeding off towards the mainiand.

State two reasons why it was difficult for Damien to stay afloat in the sea.
