Resilience High School – a school that develops the whole person

Resilience High School (RHS) was founded in 1935 by Mr Howard Eng, a successful businessman. He had experienced his fair share of failures in life, but had always persevered to get back on his feet. With a deep conviction that education should be a preparation for life and not for academic qualifications, he aspired to start a school that was ahead of its times. He also sought out like-minded educators to assist him.

Expanding Minds through a Holistic School Experience

While knowledge and acquiring new skills are important, the school has placed even greater emphasis on the learning of concepts instead of relying on rate memorisation. This would give students the Solvantage of being able to transfer their learning to a wide range of situations. In addition to core subjects, *elective modules such as Music, Theatre, Digital Design, Sports Science and Culinary Arts are offered to give students access to a holistic school experience.

Lifting Spirits with Student-Centred Activities

There is a considerable variety of activities — competitive and recreational sports, performing arts and special interest groups — for students to engage in. Every year, championship titles are won, public performances are staged, and all kinds of exhibitions, fairs and cultural events are held annually. The school has a reputation for being a place bursting with vibrant energy and enthusiasm.

*elective modules - optional subjects

Getting to the Heart of Service

To help students develop compassion and put their ideas into action, the school provides them with opportunities to play a part in creating a more caring society and protecting the environment. Students are taught to take on every task with sincerity, be willing to try new things, reflect on successes and failures. The school has been appointed as Community Ambassador for seven consecutive years. Undoubtedly, the school has established itself as an educational institution that places emphasis on giving back to the community.

"Where is it?" Ganesh, the village chief, shouted, but he had no need to ask, for we very quickly spotted the big cat not more than ninety metres off and it was trofling away from the house. It was a massive beast with beautiful reddish-orange cost with black stripes and in its laws was the wife of the cook. The tiger had the woman by the waint so that her head and arms hung down on one side and her legs on the other. The tiger, so startlingly close, was running away from us in the calmest possible manner with springy long strides. Behind the tiger, just twenty-four metres away, ran the cook himself flalling his arms and screaming, "Pull Pull Let go of my wife! Let go of my wife!"

Genech immediately gave chase after the cook, holding his rille in both hands and shouting to the cook, "Anilt Get out of the way, Anilt Lie down on the ground at I can shoot 10 the pull You are in my way!" However, the cock ignored him and kept on running.

Both the cock and Ganesh were travelling faster than the tiger who really did not seem to care about its pursuers at all. I did not know what to do to help them so I ran after Ganesh. It was an awkward situation because there was no way that Ganesh could shoot the big cat without risking a hit at the cook's wife, let alone on the cook himself who was still right in his 15 line of fire.

The tiger was heading for the lush thick jungle and we all knew that once it got in there, we would never be able to get it. The stripes on the tiger would make it difficult for us to find it amongst the dense forest. The incredibly brave cook was actually catching up on the beast and was now not more than ten metres behind him and Ganesh was thirty or forty 20 metres behind the cock. "Ayee!" the cook was shouting, "Puli! Let go my wife!"

Then Garlesh stopped, raised his rifle and took aim. Surely, I thought, he was not risking a shot at a moving beast when it had a woman in its jaws. There was a very loud crack as the big gun went off and I saw a spurt of dust just shead of the tiger. The tiger stopped in its track and turned its head, still holding the woman in its jaws. It saw the frantic cook and it 25 saw Genesh and me. The big cat had certainly heard it and even the spurt of dust. It musthave thought an army was coming after it because it dropped the cook's wife on the ground instanteously and ran for cover. I had never seen snything accelerate so fast from a standing position. With great leaping bounding stricks, it was among the lush thick vegetation before Genesh could reload his gun with another bullet.

The cook reached the wife first, then Ganesh and me. I could not believe what I saw. I was certain that the grip of those tarrible jaws would have ripped the woman's waist and stomach almost in two, but there she was, sitting up and smiling at the cook.

"Where are you hurt?" shouled Ganesh, rushing up.

The cook's wife looked up at him, kept smiling and said, "That old pull couldn't scare 35 me. I just lay there in his mouth pretending I was dead and he didn't even bite through my clothes." She stood up and straightened her dress that was wet with the tiger's saliva, looking none the worse and was totally unaffected by the experience. The cook embraced her and the two did a little dance of joy in the twilight out there on the edge of the forest. It was simply incredulous!

Genesh just stood there gaping at the cook's wife. So did I.
