The journey takes the siblings across hazardous terrain, racing through peril after peril while they forge unlikely friendships with strange creatures.

The following is an edited excerpt of an interview with the director of A Night in Enchanted Forest, Mr Justin See:

On the choice of the novel:

The novel A Night in Enchanted Forest is a fantasy adventure story which has captivated children and adults alike for generations. The action-packed and intriguing plot is a guaranteed crowd-puller. The challenge is to reproduce the "obstacle course" found in the story in the realistic setting of West Coast Park. It is my most ambitious project to date, but I have my production team to thank; they were equally excited when I told them about the idea.

This timeless tale of an individual's character growth through trials is a message our youths need to hear. The story celebrates the power of filial piety and the beauty of friendship. It is truly a children's classic and parents' delight, and makes for a wholesome family treat.

On his concept of an outdoor setting for the play:

While I usually write the scripts from scratch, this time I decided to adapt the novel to explore the genre of interactive theatre where the audience are active participants in the performance. The play involves both the actors and the audience physically wandering through the various scenes and interacting with each other to complete the tasks in the night. These are achieved through the naturalistic setting of the park against the backdrop of the starry night sky. This play promises to be an engaging experience for the audience.

On the production:

Recreating the fantastical elements in the novel poses a serious challenge. The props and costumes have been carefully made to resemble the mythical. The set designers have been working tirelessly to construct the obstacle course, through which the actors as well as the audience will pass, at the actual site of West Coast Park. We want to bring the story to life and give the audience a theatrical experience of a lifetime!

The main aim of this flyer is to

- A) promote the celebration of Halloween
- B) give a summary of the story in Lukas Vante's novel
- ✓ C) advertise the upcoming play A Night in Enchanted Forest
 - D) provide a description of Mr Justin See's work as a director

Taki, the fisherman, asked me to follow him as he walked into the shallow water of the beach. He had promised to show me what my science textbooks could not. As I walked beside him, I turned on the torchlight I had with me so that I could see better in the darkening sky.

The torchlight lit up the shallow but dark water. I could see that the ground was carpeted with rocky coral but I saw Taki move through it with familiar ease. He stood over a low rock formation that jutted out of the seabed and beckoned me over. The rocky coral felt slippery and sharp under my feet as I staggered across to join Taki. When I was finally beside him, he made me squat with him at the rock formation. The falling tide had left a small pool of seawater collected in the basin-like rock formation. This reminded me of the petting ponds and touch pools in the aquariums I had visited before. I pointed the torchlight at the pool of water but all I could see was the sandy seabed. How was this different from going to an aquarium? At least those petting ponds had starfish and small shellfish for me to touch.

"Look," Taki suddenly whispered, "octopus." My heart skipped a beat and I was overcome with excitement! The only octopuses I had ever seen before were those in science textbooks and television documentaries. However, staring as hard as I could, I saw absolutely nothing. What was Taki looking at?

"There," said Taki. Then he lowered his right arm slowly and gently into the water. His index finger was pointing at a patch of sandy seabed. "Can't you see it? Look, 20 I am almost touching it." He lowered his arm yet deeper into the water, taking care not to cause any unnecessary atarm to it. "Can you see it now, foolish boy?" he teased and patted my head affectionately with his left hand.

Suddenly, I saw it. As my eyes finally adjusted themselves to the darkness, I realised that I had been looking at it all this while. Its round body was so grey and sand-like that I had mistaken it as being a part of the sandy seabed. "It is a big one," said Taki. When his right hand was within a centimetre of the octopus, he swiftly grabbed it!

Immediately, the sand exploded in a cloud of ink released from the octopus and the wild flailing of its tentacles. Startled, I took a quick step back, almost falling into the water!

Taki laughed and hauled the octopus out of the water quickly. However, the octopus resisted capture. Instinctively, two of its tentacles seized the rocks at the side of the pool and held firmly to it. In response, Taki gave two sharp tugs. The trick worked! The octopus released its grip on the rocks. Instantly, it coiled all its tentacles around Taki's forearm. I broke out in cold sweat as I watched the tentacles tightening their squeeze. At this rate the blood supply to Taki's arm would be cut off in no time!

Strangely, while I was in shock, Taki did not seem bothered. It looked like he was calmly anticipating everything the octopus would do. He defitly wrestled with the octopus and managed to free the tentacles from his right arm. As his left hand held the struggling octopus, I noticed that the underside of its body was exposed. Taki aimed at a spot in the centre of the exposed body and swiftly struck with his right hand. Immediately, all the 40 tentacles loosened their grip and the octopus tell limply to the ground.

As Taki casually bent and picked up the octopus, I realised that Taki had truly kept his promise. It was not every day that one got to see how an octopus was subdued.

What time of the day did the story take place? Support your answer with information from the passage.
