Giving Outdoor Adventures a Shot

Written by Alison Li

The last time I slept outdoors in a tent was during a Primary 1 camp and I recall sleeping on the wet ground as rain pelted down noisily on the thin canvas sheet. The wind carried with it the smell of dingy toilets. Once I was back home, I gratefully slipped between my soft sheets and slept for 20 hours straight!

I have since avoided sleeping in anything that needs to be pitched though the nature lover in me continues to seek the great outdoors. So when my parents asked me if I wanted to give Glampting a try during our last holiday, I thought, "Should I give those tents another chance? But if 'comfy beds' were provided, why not?"

Lo and behold, the moment my parents and I checked into our 'room' by the water's edge, I fell in love with it. The glittering setting sun, the gentle breeze rocking the tent, the dinner under the stars and nodding off to the waves crashing on the shore while staying snug in bed were the most memorable moments of the trip.

Now I understand why my parents had encouraged me to give the tents another chance. Thanks to them, I got to experience the new trend of enjoying the fun of the outdoors without having to sacrifice modern comforts such as those found in hotels. The adventure factor of traditional camping with hotel-style accommodation was indeed a whole new experience for me. When it was time to leave, I felt both calm and energised.

It's difficult not to be happy on an outdoor adventure!

Written by Julius Ong

Why? I could immerse myself in Mother Nature and appreciate the flora and fauna around me. I could relish in the splendid scenery and the experience of living outdoors. I could feel the tranquility all around, the sweet sound of birdsongs and the soothing rustle of leaves in the breeze. I could...

... camp and at the same time enjoy hotel amenities;

... spend less as compared to booking a hotel room;

... enjoy fresh air in a natural landscape;

... move around freely as the tents were comfortable and spacious;

... relax in the sounds of nature;

... break free from spending too much time on electronic devices and have more time with my family.

Question 62

I finally spotted it at the base of an enormous tree. There was no sound inside. I began to imitate the high-pitched squeak of a mother wolf calling for her young. I waited. Nothing happened. Wolf pups are known to be shy and cautious. I tried again. Then, a few moments later, four tiny pups appeared. Gingerly, I placed them into my bag and headed back down the slope.

5

It was a splendid morning. I had been hiking in the forest in Alaska. As I emerged from the woods, I froze in my tracks. In front of me was a huge Alaskan wolf – its leg caught in a trap. Seeing the tiny paw prints in the snow, I knew she had just given birth. Confused and frightened by my presence, the wolf backed away, straining at the trap. Could she have been trapped for some time? Had she fed her pups? But, I knew better than to free her leg. What if she turned aggressive? What if she attacked me? Thus, I decided to look for her babies instead and began to follow the trails that might lead me to her den.

10

When the mother wolf spotted me, she sat up. I released her pups, and they raced to her. "What's next?" I wondered. The mother wolf was clearly suffering as she whimpered in pain. Yet each time, I moved in her direction, a menacing growl rumbled in her throat. She needed food. I had to find her something to eat. Picking up my bag, I hiked towards the closest river and spotted the carcass of a deer on the snowbank. I took one of its legs and left the rest in nature's refrigerator. Carrying the meat back to the wolf, I whispered in a soothing tone, "Here's your dinner. But only if you stop growling at me." Next, I tossed it in her direction. She sniffed at it and then gobbled it up.

15

That night, I made a makeshift shelter under a tree not far away from the wolf family and was soon fast asleep. The unexpected happened the next morning. I was awakened by four fluffy, fearless bundles sniffing at my face. Over the next few days, I attempted to get close to her. I talked gently to her, threw her more meat and played with her young. Little by little, I kept edging closer to her, but the big animal never took her suspicious dark eyes off me. Then, on the fifth day, when I delivered her the meat, her pups came bounding towards me. At least, I had their trust, I thought. Just as I was beginning to lose hope, I saw the wolf wagging her tail slightly. Instinctively, I sat close to her. But, my heart was in my mouth. One snap of her huge jaw and it could spell doom for me. I wrapped my blanket around myself and slept fitfully that night.

25

I awoke at dawn, stirred by the sound of the pups. Gently, I leaned over and petted them. Assessing the situation, I placed my hand on the wolf's injured leg. She flinched but made no threatening move. "This can't be happening," I thought excitedly. I could see that the trap's steel jaws had imprisoned two of her toes. Applying pressure, the trap sprang open and the wolf was free! Almost immediately, she began licking my fingers. I was astonished! This went against everything I had heard about wolves – dangerous, ferocious, intimidating. That day, I found out that these animals, in fact, are actually very social, family-oriented and trustworthy.
