Visual Text

NANQING HALL
presents our inaugural
Nanqing Festival
Dates: 11 & 12 August 2018
Time: 10 am to 10 pm
Venue: Chamber City, Arts Centre

Our Nanqing Festival hopes to enlighten our visitors regarding the various festivals celebrated by the Chinese community throughout the world. This includes the kite festival.

Our insightful exhibition booths will depict how different Chinese families celebrate the numerous festivals such as the rice festival, the kite-flying festival and the sailing festival. This sailing festival is certainly extraordinary. Participants will learn how to make miniature boats from recycled materials at an affordable fee.

Why Nanqing Festival?
The idea of organising this festival occurred to the organiser as it would like to share its enthusiasm about the Chinese culture and the interesting festivals celebrated by the Chinese. The event will provide clear insights into the Chinese beliefs, their way of life and customs.

EXCITING HIGHLIGHTS!

The activities are free unless otherwise stated.

Booth 1: Make Your Own Dumplings

Learn to make glutinous rice dumplings the traditional way. Stuff, wrap and tie your own dumplings and enjoy them.

Date: 11 & 12 August

Time: 11.00 am – 6.00 pm

Booth 2: Kite Making *

Let your imagination soar! Design your very own paper kite from recycled materials, decorated with pictures of dumplings and dragons. Your masterpieces will be on display at Chamber City Hall.

Date: 11 August

Time: 1.00 pm – 4.00 pm

Booth 3: Nanqing Heritage & Food Trail

Learn about the traditions and culture of Nanqing. Embark on this trail to explore special sites in the neighbourhood and sample delicious authentic delights.

Question 62

Primary 6 English » Primary 6 English (Prelim)

Before the break of dawn, Simon was already standing on the shore watching the sea intensely for any signs of an impending storm. Despite learning from the weather forecast the likelihood of a violent one, it did little to change his mind about embarking on his weekly fishing trip. On lucky days, he would catch enough fish to sell and feed his family for at least a month. Checking for the third time that he had brought with him what he needed, including enough food and water, Simon got onto his boat and sailed into the vast blue sea. Before long, he was anchoring his vessel in the middle of the sea. Satisfied with the spot he cast his net with dexterity, hoping for a good catch.

Simon then relaxed on the deck and got ready to eat his first meal of the day. He smiled and watched the sun rising slowly above the horizon. "One can never trust the weather station," he muttered, but he had said it too soon. At that precise moment, there was a sudden streak of lightning, followed by a deafening roar of thunder. As if a wicked wizard had just waved his magic wand, the entire sky was suddenly filled with ominous dark clouds. Then, the heavens opened. Wave after wave rolled up, flooding his boat and sending it rocking violently sideways like an amusement park ride. A sense of foreboding engulfed him but when images of his family flashed across his mind, he knew what he had to do. In double-quick time, he cut off the fishing lines after bailing out as much water as he could out of the boat. When the situation did not improve, he dumped his fishing equipment into the sea. Watching his prized possession sink into the deep water, Simon felt a stabbing pain in his heart. It had taken him half a year to scrimp and save enough money to buy the second-hand gear but given the dire straits that he was in, Simon knew he had no other choice. Eventually, the storm subsided and the waves died down.

Simon looked around him glumly. He seemed to have lost his bearings. To make matters worse, the engine spluttered and died. Cursing under his breath, he yanked on the engine cord. Nothing happened. He yanked again and again until it snapped. In desperation, the poor fisherman scanned the sea but there was nothing, not even the police-coast guards. Being many kilometres offshore, the only likely rescue was to be spotted by a boat. That would be difficult. Who would be out at sea in such inclement weather except him? That made Simon regret his earlier stubbornness.

Exhausted, Simon huddled in a corner of the boat and soon drifted off to sleep. When he awoke, the sun had already risen. How long had he slept? Had he been away from home for more than a day? Simon had lost track of time. He had drunk the last drop of water and eaten the last morsel of his food, but it did not matter that he was thirsty and famished. He missed his family dearly. The piercing cries of the seagulls which filled the clear blue sky jolted him out of his reverie. Sighing, he stood on the deck, staring out hopefully. Then, he spotted it. He dived overboard and swam towards the island a few metres ahead of him. By the time Simon reached land, he was too weak to stand on his wobbly legs. Fortunately, a kind-hearted man who lived on the island helped him up and contacted his family. Though Simon emerged from the ordeal unscathed, the fateful day remained etched in his mind. Once heedless of the dangers of Mother Nature, he now learnt to be more mindful of his decision. This was his way of making sure he would not relive his nightmare.
