"Factors to Consider Before Getting a Pet" by Dr Vanessa, a veterinarian

Is your family agreeable to owning a pet?

Pets can help a family to develop closer ties by providing a common ground for family togetherness. It is important to make sure that all your family members agree to owning a pet before you get one to avoid family conflicts over a pet.

What type of pet best suits your lifestyle?

Different types of pets have different characteristics and require different levels of care. Dogs, for example, need more personal attention than cats so they are less suitable for people who often travel overseas or work long hours.

Do you know enough about the pet to care for it properly?

Different types of pets have different needs. Find out as much as you can about the pet, such as the type of environment, food and exercise the pet needs before getting one. This would go a long way towards ensuring that your pet is healthy and happy.

Do you know how long your pet may live?

Getting to know about the lifespan of your pet will prepare you for the expected commitment. Be committed to caring for your pet for its whole life.

Do you have the resources to own a pet?

Caring for pets can be demanding. They demand our time and attention. Money is required for cages, food, accessories and medical bills. Pets also require living space within our homes. A responsible pet owner needs to make sure that all these are provided for.

Are you up to it?

Pet owners have to be considerate by obeying licensing laws, sterilising their pets, cleaning up after their pets in public places and ensuring that their pets do not disturb other people.

Interesting facts about dogs and cats

1. Guide dogs assist visually impaired people to avoid obstacles, stop at curbs and steps and negotiate traffic. They are trained to obey their owners. If the guide dogs judge that it is unsafe, they will refuse to obey the command. This is called "intelligent disobedience". They know when they are on or off duty too.
2. Dogs are long distance runners, not sprinters. Cats are just the reverse in this aspect.
3. Dogs' memory is only about five minutes long while cats can retain information for up to 16 hours.
4. Cats and dogs have 230 and 319 bones respectively, while humans only have 206 bones.
5. Dogs have 42 teeth, cats have 30 and humans have 32.
6. Unlike dogs, cats are not able to taste sweetness.

Comprehension

Big Sister once told me resentfully, "If you had not been born, Mama would still be alive. She died because of you. You brought bad luck!"

She never forgave me.

I had another two younger siblings by our step-mother, Niang. These two siblings were already "special" from the moment they were born. They were superior in every way. Big Sister and I were given shabby clothes but my step-siblings had stylish outfits. They could eat whatever they desired at any hour of the day but we were only allowed three meals a day with congee and preserved vegetables for breakfast every morning. My step-siblings had their own rooms on the first floor of our large house and we were not allowed to be there without Niang's permission. Unlike them, we could only enter and leave our house through the back door like our servants.

One Sunday morning, Niang was attempting to entice her baby daughter with a candy to go to her. Rejecting the bribe, Little Sister ran away from her. Thoroughly exasperated, Niang gave a stinging slap across her baby's face. Deliberately and viciously, she continued landing blows on Little Sister. Everyone cowered. The grown-ups avoided looking at one another while we children shrank into our seats. I could not understand why Father, Grandfather and Aunt were making no attempt to stop the assault.

I knew I should remain silent but words choked me and I felt compelled to spit them out. Finally, I could no longer bear it. Quaking with terror, I blurted out, "Don't beat her anymore! She's only a baby!"

"How dare you!" Niang hissed.

For a few moments, I thought she was going to pounce on me instead. Everyone froze. Even the grown-ups dared not utter a word for fear of Niang. In those few moments, I had understood everything – not only about Niang, but also all the grown-ups. Now that Grandmother was dead, there was no doubt who was in charge.

Fuming with rage, Niang pointed her index finger at me. "Get out!" she snarled in a cold voice. "I shall never forgive you! Never! Never! Never! You had better watch out from now on! You will pay for your arrogance!"

The next morning, Niang called out for my siblings to give them pocket money. I felt a stab of anguish because I was the only one being excluded. Big Sister came in front of me to show off her money and counted her coins aloud, one by one.

After school, I saw Niang in the living room. "Good afternoon, Niang," I greeted her tremulously, fingering the coin in my pocket and wondering where to hide it.

"What is in your pocket? Come here!" she demanded. 35

- I approached her slowly, shaking like a leaf.

"Who gave you this? she thundered.

What could I tell her without implicating Aunt? My silence was infuriating her. She went into a rage and slapped me. I felt dizzy and my ears hummed but I continued to stare at her in petrified silence. 40

"You little thief! You don't deserve to be housed and fed here. You should be sent away!" Niang bellowed.

Later, after Father returned home from work, he came into my room with a cane. I remained silent throughout my punishment.

"Unfortunately, your aunt is a bad influence. You two have to be separated!" 45

Father roared.

My heart felt heavy with the most excruciating pain.

Before long, I was sent to a boarding school for girls in England. Though I missed Aunt terribly and felt lonely at times, it was a great escape for me. Aunt remarked that I was a Chinese Cinderella as I had defied all odds and garnered triumph through my 50 own effort to graduate as a medical doctor. It was a dream come true!
