Visual Text Comprehension

The BATTLE against All Things Sweet and Nice!

Carbonated DrinksWhy do people find them irresistible?

- Brilliant Advertising: The advertisements are designed to sell happiness and many sports celebrities are sponsored to be "seen" with them.
- Good Collectors' Item: Some cans are extremely attractive, with a wide range of designs. You can even customise a can with your name on it!
- More Flavour: It is a drink that bubbles and fizzes with carbon dioxide gas. The carbonation is used to give "bite" to the flavour.

CupcakesWhy are they such a hit with people, especially parents?

- Fond Associations: Cupcakes tend to accompany in-school celebrations of birthdays and therefore signify a special treat.
- Pretty Presentation: There is an endless array of decorations from sprinkles to chocolate curls and candy. It can even be customised to suit a birthday theme.
- What's Inside: Cupcakes used to be made of one plain flavour. Now, there are many varieties to choose from and some may even have an edible toy inside!

Chandler's Story

Chandler has had diabetes when he was four years old. He has to get daily injections and be careful with what he eats. Despite having such a condition, he is still a very active boy who enjoys many activities!

A question was posed to Chandler. What do children who do not have diabetes need to know about it? He said that they need to know that it is not contagious. Also, the blood sugar levels can sometimes drop drastically in people with diabetes. He/she might have a lot of different symptoms, including getting a headache and feeling drowsy or weak. These may lead to dire consequences if left untreated.

Health Ministry Recommendations

Do you know that 1 in 10 Singaporeans is diabetic and having too many desserts and sugared drinks can lead to obesity and diabetes? Here are some steps the Health Ministry recommends that one can take to reduce these health issues of obesity and diabetes.

1. Make healthy drinking your personal priority. Start by choosing beverages with few or no calories or take carbonated beverages in small quantities. However, plain water is still the best beverage.
2. Do not stock sugary drinks at home. Research shows that children and teens drink a lot of sweetened drinks at home so parents can help them cut back on their sugar intake by not stocking up on soda, fruit punch, or other sugary drinks in the house. Make them an occasional treat rather than a daily beverage.
3. Replace desserts with wholesome nuts. Nuts make delicious snacks and are high in vitamins and minerals! However, go for plain instead of candied ones!

The word "Battle" is used in the title. It signifies _____

- ✓ A. a fight against obesity and diabetes
- B. the act of weighing the pros and cons of all things sweet and nice
- C. the struggle parent have against their children who have a sweet tooth
- D. the recommendations given by the Health Ministry to reduce health issues

Comprehension

5 My grandmother had been with us for a little over a month and already it seemed as if she had lived with us all our lives. I enjoyed her presence in our house, especially the moments she spent with me telling me stories. I would visualise them as they were told. My favourite ones were those of my mother when she was young. I tried to visualise her in dresses, skipping about the village she lived in with my grandparents and being naughty, but my imagination failed me.

10 My grandmother was always ready to explore new things and places and face new challenges. There was no end to her energy and enthusiasm and she managed to infect each and every one of us with the same spirit. The house was always filled with cheer.

15 All was good until the day she fell in her room. We found her lying on the floor, looking white and shaken even though she claimed she felt no pain. Concerned, I remained by my grandmother's side that day, cancelling my original plan of going to the library with my friends. Grandma remained in bed throughout the rest of the day.

20 The next morning, seeing that Grandma looked bored, I suggested, "Grandma, come, let us go to the garden for some fresh air." However, she showed no interest at all. "Grandma, come on," I said impatiently. She shook her head and said, "Things have changed. I am bound to fall again if I start walking. It's better for me to just lie in bed." With that, my grandmother remained in bed all day and the days that followed. When she had to go to the bathroom, she would call for us and we would have to escort her there and back to the bed. This disrupted our usual routine.

25 A week passed and my grandmother still showed no signs of resuming her normal life. I pleaded and cajoled her but it was to no avail. I did not understand why my grandmother was being so stubborn. She was obviously capable of walking but chose to think otherwise. Eventually, the doctor was called in to examine her legs. "There is nothing wrong with her," he said. "The scare from the fall must have planted fear in her mind that makes her think she cannot walk. Buy her a walker. It will give her more confidence and she will walk on her own soon." We told my grandmother she was fine but she completely scorned the idea. The walker that my father bought remained by her bedside, unused.

30 Ever since the fall, there was an air of depression and boredom that hung heavily in the house. There were no more stories shared and at the rate at which she picked at her food, there would be no more grandmother soon. I was not even excited at the thought that my birthday was around the corner. I had to do something, but what could I do?

35 An idea presented itself unexpectedly. One night, I was telling my grandmother about the preparations for the Sports Day at school. "Your mother loved racing," she said suddenly.

40 "When she was ten, she and I would run up the hill slopes. Sometimes we climbed the Chamunda Hill, the most difficult one in our village. Not many dared to do that. Her eyes finally showed some signs of animation. "I don't believe you did all that! You had to be very brave and determined to do that but here you are, too scared to get out of bed. How do you expect me to believe you?" I shouted. Shocked at my own outburst, I ran off to my room, tears falling down my cheeks.

I woke to my mother's beaming face the next morning. "You will never guess," she said triumphantly, "Grandma has started using the walker!" I could not help but grin. It was the best birthday present I could have hoped for. My parents often wondered what caused the change in her but that was Grandma's secret and mine.
