The Story behind Farm & Barn

Located amidst lush greenery at the top of Bukit Lorang hill, coming to Farm & Barn is like going to a secret hideaway farm in Singapore. Owner of Farm & Barn, Mr Alvin Tan, an ex-Science teacher, first started the farm in 2015 to pursue his passion for agriculture. It started during his childhood days when his family owned an orchard. However, due to his busy lifestyle, he was temporarily unable to pursue his interest. Although there was little publicity, business has grown by word of mouth. The farm is always bustling with group tours and school field trips.

The Dream!

Mr Alvin Tan, who has also been an environmental advocate for the past 20 years, shares his inspiration for this inaugural event at his farm, "Global warming has always been a concern. Our warming planet affects our populations, ecosystems and animal species. But I believe that when there's a will, there's a way. Every one of us, the young and old, can take the lead in making a positive difference to nurse our beautiful Earth back to good health! It is my desire to be able to reach out to more people and encourage the community to lead an environmentally-friendly lifestyle."

Mr Alvin suggests trying the following simple steps to cultivate a more eco-friendly lifestyle:

- > Reduce plastic use
- > Reduce food wastage
- > Recycle everything

According to Mr Alvin Tan, this event is even more meaningful as Earth Day 2020 will mark the 50th anniversary of the world's largest environmental movement. He promises that this will definitely be an annual event so that he can reach out to more people.

The main objective of the event is to ____

- A. attract more people to visit Farm & Barn
- B. encourage people to take up agriculture
- ✓ C. encourage people to lead an eco-friendly lifestyle
- D. provide opportunities for families to bond together

Question 66

Primary 6 English » Primary 6 English (Term 2)

Billy Bunch was unlike other children his age. He had a stutter. Each time before he could finish his sentence, his classmates were already laughing at him. That made him reluctant to communicate. He was certainly not a favourite among his teachers either as he was inattentive during lessons and made little attempt to disguise it.

"It's your turn to read the next page aloud, Billy," Mr Brown, Billy's teacher, would say. While Billy stuttered his way through, the smirks and sniggers of his classmates added to the hurt and humiliation he tried so hard to hide. The only place Billy felt completely at ease was the Wilderness, to which he would escape without fail every time he was taunted by his classmates. There, he could be himself and not have to worry about what others thought about him.

Billy had stumbled upon the place by chance. That evening, Billy saw a great white owl fly over his head and into the ruins of a chapel. Intrigued by the bird, he ran after it for a closer look, but it disappeared from sight. It turned out to be a blessing in disguise. Billy discovered something even more fascinating when he looked around him. The Wilderness. Since that day, Billy would visit the Wilderness while ensuring nobody spotted him. Here, he could lie back on the springy grass and watch the kingfishers by the canal. Billy knew every creature in the Wilderness. Not only that, he took it upon himself to protect all the creatures against the predatory cats. A stinging shot from his catapult was sufficient to deter them from returning. He declared himself the guardian of the Wilderness.

One evening, Billy was lying in the tall grass by the canal, kingfisher-watching, when he saw a blue-grey cygnet emerge from the bushes and move gracefully towards him. Suddenly, he heard a voice yelling, "Let's sink the swan!" Billy shivered, retreating further into the long grass. He saw five youths hurling a continuous barrage of stones at the cygnet. Seeing the cygnet beat its wings in a frantic effort to take off, outrage drove away Billy's fear. Billy knew at once what had to be done. Immediately, he leapt out into the canal and ploughed through the water towards the cygnet. Under the bombardment of stones, Billy put his hands over his head to protect himself, but one hit him on the arm, leaving a red gash. He winced in pain. Reaching out, he clutched the struggling bird firmly by the wings, shielding it from the stones as he made for the safety of the chapel.

Once there, Billy sank to his knees and set the cygnet down. Still simmering with anger, he sat in silence for some minutes. His anger vanished as he admired the young swan preening itself.

"You're the most beautiful thing I've ever seen," Billy whispered. The cygnet looked up at him. "Did they kill your mother too?" Billy asked. "They did, didn't they? Well, I'll look after you now. Wish you could speak to me. You could teach me how to fly for a start." Just then, Billy was aware that his words were flowing easily without a trace of a stutter. "Never mind the flying, you've taught me to speak!" Billy exclaimed as he got on his feet, dancing around the chapel. By the time Billy turned to where the cygnet had been standing, all he found was one small grey feather on the chapel ground. He picked it up and put it into his pocket.

The next morning, when it was Billy's turn to read aloud in class, he stood up and noticed the children sniggering around him. Then, using his grey feather to underline the words, he began reading clearly and confidently. Mr Brown took off his glasses in disbelief, and every smirk in the classroom was wiped away as Billy read on faultlessly to the end of the page. Billy knew he had triumphed over himself and his classmates. There was silence around Billy, born of astonishment and respect that he had never felt before.
