Ahmad loved to help out at his parents' hawker stall at the market. He was happy to help his parents as the stall was always very crowded and his parents were very busy serving the customers. They were grateful for his help but only allowed him to help out after he had finished his homework.

Ahmad's job was to deliver food to the customers and collect money for the food from them. He found that collecting money had helped him with his Mathematics and he was able to calculate the change mentally without using pen and paper.

Their hawker stall had originally belonged to Ahmad's grandparents who sold noodles seven days a week. There was always a long queue at the stall which was known for its delicious and affordable noodles. Ahmad's parents continued with the family business after his grandparents passed away. The stall remained popular as they continued to use the same secret recipe created by his grandfather.

Customers would usually place their orders with Ahmad's mother and his father would prepare the food. Once the noodles were cooked, Ahmad would bring the plates of food to the tables where the customers sat.
